ST. PAUL'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.

"Godliness with contentment is great gain." This was contained in a letter read by a young man, whose name was Timothy. The writer bolsters up this truth with two piercing arguments: 1. For we brought nothing into this world—we should be satisfied with the way the Lord is taking care of us between the cradle and the grave. 2. For neither can we carry anything out—how foolish to make your life's aim the accumulation of the things of this earth. The people who enjoy doing just that seldom live to enjoy what they have stored or hoarded up for themselves. Godliness will lead to a contented, a trustful spirit, without undue concern, or still less encumbered by a grasping greed. "Having food and shelter we shall be therewith con-

HONDO REVIVAL AT FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

Plans are being made for the revival meeting that will begin at the First Baptist Church, Hondo, next Sunday night, August 9. The committee in charge has taken each detail and made worthy preparations. Rev. S. L. Cole, the evangelist, will arrive in Hondo Sunday afternoon and will speak in the first service Sunday night. There is a fine interest on the part of the people. Roger W. Babson said the greatest need of the country is "a great spiritual revival in the churches."
Prof. William J. Work of the Baptist Temple, San Antonio, has been engaged to lead the music during this meeting. Mr. Head, because of sickness in his family, could not come. The people of Hondo will enjoy the singing under the leadership of Mr. Work. He will lead an adult choir each night; the singers of Hondo are invited to come and join the choir. Mr. Work is planning a big "booster choir" for the children. He wants all the children of the city to come and be with him. Regardless of what church you attend, bring your children and let them be in this group. Mr. Work will sing a beautiful solo at each service.
Rev. Mr. Cole announces that he will speak on the following subjects: "How to Have the Spiritual Awakening"; "Hands Up"; "Hatched in the Devil's Incubators"; "Beauty for Ashes"; "When Fire Did Not Burn"; "There is a Great Day Coming"; "God's Great Mountains"; "Modern Jonahs"; "The Coming World Kingdom"; "Blockading the Way to Hell" and other subjects to be announced. You are invited to hear Rev. Cole. Services will be held daily at 9 A. M. and 7:45 P. M. Bring your family and friends. The people of the other churches and those who do not attend any church are invited to come to all the services. This meeting will do every one good. Let us all co-operate for the success of the meeting.

COUNTY CONVENTION.

Pursuant to the call of County Chairman L. J. Brucks, the county convention for the Democratic party was held at the courthouse Saturday afternoon.
Previous to the opening of the convention, the County Executive committee canvassed the returns of the primary election of Saturday, July 25th, and declared the result.
The count showed that the vote was substantially as unofficially reported last week except that the totals were reduced by the number cast in the North Castrovilla box. For some reason, neither the County Chairman nor the County Clerk received the official returns from that box.
A tabulated statement of the result as established by the official count in most of the contested places is published elsewhere in this paper. Elsewhere, also, appears a revised list of the County Executive Committee, showing the result of the primary ballot affecting the party organization. Judge L. J. Brucks was re-elected County Chairman.
After the results of the primary had been ascertained, on motion duly made and carried, the County Chairman was empowered to issue credentials to any Democrats who desire to attend the State or any of the District Conventions, authorizing them to act as delegates and without any instructions.
The convention then adjourned.

THE WAY IT WORKS.

The TVA recently requested the Interstate Commerce Commission to order the Southern Railway to vacate a branch line eleven miles long between two small Tennessee towns. The TVA said that part of the line would eventually be inundated by rising waters behind Norris Dam, one of the Authority's principal sources of power.

The Southern Railway objected to the request, contending that if TVA activities endanger its line, the Authority should make provision for relocation. And now the Tennessee county through which the branch line runs has filed a protest with the ICC in support of the railway's contention.

The county's brief says that abandonment of the line would eliminate competition, and greatly inconvenience shippers in the area. It then says that TVA has already acquired 1,200 pieces of property in the county and withdrawn them from taxation, with the result that the county treasury is already losing $22,000 tax annually. Discontinuance of the taxpaying railroad branch line would cause an additional loss of $1,157 per year. "The county has a heavy bonded indebtedness," the protest reads, "and the loss of this taxable property is a very serious matter."

It will be recalled that high officials of a Southern state also had ridiculous things to say about TVA recently, in pointing out that the private utilities are heavily taxed, while TVA, which is ambitious to supplant them, pays almost no taxes.

It is said but true that when government goes into business, the taxpayers foot the bill in many ways. Southern residents are discovering that now. If the desires of those who wish to establish similar "socialistic" authorities elsewhere are followed, the whole country will discover the same sad truth before long.—Industrial News Review.

MUST FORCE TAX REDUCTION.

One of the most encouraging phases of the late campaign was the attitude taken by the majority of the candidates for public office toward the cost of government and the need for tax reduction. President-elect Roosevelt has stated that a 25 per cent cut is essential and has pledged his efforts toward achieving that. Those elected with him have echoed his views.

If such a reduction is made it will have an amazingly fine effect on the country—not only in the money that is another phase of the campaign that is going to be interesting to watch. For three years, Roosevelt has had open channels on the radio, has had the uttermost freedom in picking his spots and delivering new pronouncements and appeals for patience by the people. But that time has passed and as the President is confronted, he is now confronted with opposition. What I am trying to say is that everywhere and every time the President speaks, he will meet with the knowledge that a strong opposition is ready to leap upon every word and every proposal he makes. This is an entirely new circumstance than any other Roosevelt has faced since he moved into the White House March 4, 1933.

"You were right in the beginning," Pat said. "There was only one thing to do. Father saw Kelly alive after his husband left him, and we should have said so."

"I can't stand seeing Peggy," Pat continued. "Was that what you had in mind when you sent her here? Anyhow, it's too terrible. She comes down way, it's too terrible. You know, to breakfast, looking—well, you know, like a ghost—alone—and I didn't. I do now, and we've got to 'come clean.'"

"I don't think it matters," Barry replied. "I still think we can free Kelly without that."

"How soon?"

"By next Wednesday."

Pat nodded.

"All right," she said. "We'll wait until Wednesday."

Barry had never seen her more charming. As they walked down the beach, to join the others, he asked, "Are you ever going to confess how you found out about me?"

Pat laughed.

"That was too easy. The night of Marian's visit, you told me you'd taken the name Barry Gilbert. And it had a curiously familiar sound. After a moment, I remembered that I'd once seen an actor called Barry Gilbert in a war picture."

"And then?"

"Then you shut your hand in the glove. The expression of mingled surprise and pain in your face—that was what had kept the picture and the actor in my mind. You were the man who'd come out of the drinking place, laughing and talking, and been shot. I was sure of that—just as sure as I was that you'd crushed your fingers deliberately to keep us from knowing that, unlike the Jack Rider you were supposed to be, you couldn't play a villain any more than you could play Hamlet."

"I'm glad you found out," Barry said. "I'm glad I haven't been deceiving you at all events."

They had reached the railroad building.

"Pat! Jack called. 'Pat! We've finished—'"

"Jack! You mustn't call Miss Hamblidge 'Pat.'"

"Everybody else does."

"I like it," Patricia came to the rescue. "We're Pat and Peg to each other now; why shouldn't I be Pat to Jack?"

It was almost a miracle, Barry decided. Was this the same girl of whom, only a couple of months ago, her father had said, "Pat, for short, though it takes courage to call her that."

The change wasn't all his doing, or Peg's. Something else had contributed to softening Pat, and making her sweeter and lovelier. It was ironic, Barry felt, and bitter—that she should be the loveliest when he was losing her. What of his plan to come back for her—some day, when I've made good? A girl like that might marry an ex-convict.

Barry drove back to town Sunday evening without having put anybody's house in order. He had dined with the Hamblidges, and gone over there in the morning "to see Jack start for his ride."

"Well, our trial's set for two weeks from today," said Winslow when Barry called at his office Monday morning.

"I'm still hoping there won't be any trial."

"Meaning that you think you've got Mrs. Kelly?"

That was the question Barry had dreaded. Winslow's frank amusement at his "sleuthing" nettled him, and made him feel foolish. Especially now that he was compelled to admit, "No; I'm afraid you were right about Mrs. Kelly. She slept at her sister's that night."

"Well, then," Peter asked, "who's the latest candidate?"

"Do you remember reading me your cross examination of the Filipino?"

"A new notes for it—yes."

"You found a lot of holes in the boy's story?"

"Yes."

But Barry was still amused.

"Well, I've got a few more," Barry said, "and a motive."

He sat down, and Peter opposite him. Barry repeated what Evans had told him of the dinner with Nolan.

"Well," Peter remarked, at the end, "that settles the case against Rogers."

"You think so?"

"Obviously," said Nolan sticks to his story. We say Nolan's testimony establishes that the decanter was downstairs all the time Rogers was upstairs. But we've got to make the jury believe it."

"Or the district attorney."

Winslow shook his head.

The district attorney wouldn't move for dismissal of an indictment on that evidence."

"But—"

"You're perfectly sure that the Filipino killed Kelly," Winslow went on. "I'm not. And the district attorney wouldn't be. The Filipino was angry. That's all there really is to that story."

"And Kelly was alive an hour after Rogers left."

"That's what we've got to prove to the jury. My own guess is that the decanter had been carried into the dining room when the murderer entered the house."

"After Nolan went home?"

"Yes, and after the Filipino went to bed."

"And that man—"

"You're sure it was a man?"

"Very sure. And that man was someone who had better reason than we've found yet for hating or dreading Mike Kelly."

Barry rose.

Peter had picked a glove off his desk, and was turning it right side out. "Have you ever thought of Luis Morano?" Barry asked.

Winslow let the glove fall.

"Why?"

"He seems to have had some reason for hating Kelly."

"You mean that row in the Coconut Bar?" Peter said. "Oddly enough, that's why I haven't thought of Morano. He was telephoning me from the Coconut Bar—about the row—at the time of the murder."

"Luis always came to me when he was in trouble. And he called me, at home, just after one that morning, to say that one of his girls was in jail, and would I take the case. I could hear that jazz of his."

Barry stooped for the glove.

"Well, that's that," he remarked. "Kelly was threatening Morano, you know, and—"

But Peter was smiling again.

"You can make a case against almost anyone," he said. "But a case that'll stand up—that's another thing."

Barry grinned sheepishly.

Winslow pressed a button.

"Stop worrying," he advised Barry. "We're going to free Rogers. If we have to get the guilty man to do it, we'll get him, but let's give the court a chance first."

"I'm Glad You Found Out," Barry Said.

"I guess we'll have to," Barry conceded.

Peter's secretary opened the door.

"What's Nolan's first name?" Peter asked Barry. "And where's his garage? Got it, Miss Clark? Now, get Nolan in here this afternoon."

He looked up at Barry.

"Don't mind my joking," he said. "Something tells me you did a grand job when you turned up Mr. Nolan."

"Peter's wonderfully kind," Barry told Harwood that evening. "but he makes me feel as small as an author's name in a motion picture advertisement."

"I don't think Winslow means to make anyone feel small," Ernie answered. "He's too big for that. It's the small men who've got to make other people smaller, in self-defense. The trouble with Winslow is that he's generally right, and that's trying, no matter how kind anyone may be about it."

"Winslow's a great lawyer," he went on, "and a swell guy. He's had his own troubles, too. Ever meet his wife?"

"Once."

"He's nearly wrecked his career for her, you know. She ran away from home with some youngster in a military school. The kid turned crook, and the cops killed him. Then she married Winslow. The tabloids played the story up all over the place, and Mrs. Winslow crashed, and had to be taken to Europe. She went to pieces again two or three years ago, and Winslow closed the office, and went to live in the South of France. The money gave out. I guess. Anyway, they didn't stay long. Of course, that telephone message doesn't prove anything."

"You mean Morano's message to Winslow?"

"Yes. Luis might have sent that at one o'clock, and still've been in time for the murder."

"Is there any chance that Luis didn't send it?"

"Why do you ask that?"

"It occurs to me that Peter might be shielding someone."

"Whom? Morano?" Harwood shook his head. "Winslow isn't that kind of a lawyer. As a matter of fact, I know Morano phoned him."

"Who told you?"

"Violet Fane."

"Then you've been to the Coconut Bar?"

"Yes. I went Saturday, and met all your cronies. Miss Fane says Luis followed Peggy Rogers around to the police station, and then came back to the Par, and called up his lawyer, and drove to Morristown."

"At one o'clock?"

"Yes."

"How about 'faking an alibi'?"

"You reminded me it could be done," Barry went on.

Ernie turned suddenly.

"Ever strike you as queer," he asked, "that nobody ever connected Kelly's murder with the Jefferson Street grab?"

Barry couldn't trust himself to reply.

"They were pulled off about the same time. As I remember it, Judge Hamblidge's decision was handed down the day after the killing."

Barry remained silent.

"Kelly stood to make a million or two on that deal," Harwood continued. "Those Jefferson Street houses were pretty decent once. Then they went slummy. Through agents, Kelly bought 'em in, one by one, for little or nothing, and turned 'em over to a phoney corporation to sell to the city at a huge profit. Some of the original owners may have been a little bit sore, don't you think?"

The conversation was drifting into safer channels, and, relieved, Barry let it flow on.

"As a matter of fact," Harwood resumed, "someone was—very sore. He called me up, the day of the murder, and offered to squeal. He wouldn't give me his name, but he said he'd be here, at ten-thirty that night, to deliver the goods on Kelly."

"And then?"

"Then he didn't show up."

"Somebody got to him."

"Probably. And then somebody killed Kelly."

Barry asked, "Is that the clue you had in mind when you said, 'Tell Winslow I may have a tip for him some day'?"

Harwood nodded.

"Yes, but, as I remarked later, that guy who phoned might have been anybody. I didn't have a darn thing to go on except that he had a soft voice and a funny impediment in his speech."

"And then—"

"Then you told me about Morano, and I went to the Coconut Bar. The guy that phoned me was Morano, all right. But what does that mean? Not a thing, maybe. If Morano did hop in his car at one o'clock that night—"

He paused.

"I've got a dozen men on this trail. Now, I'm going to send somebody to Morristown. Not you. They know you. Your job is to lay low. Morano hasn't the faintest idea who I am. I told him I came from Grand Rapids. But—"

The city editor was pacing the floor.

"My God, how this picture begins fitting together," he cried. "Morano threatens to spill the beans. Someone tells Kelly. Kelly goes to the Coconut Bar. With two strong-arm men. Why? To silence a squealer. That was around eight o'clock, and, at ten-thirty, the squealer didn't squeal. Why? Because Kelly had something on him."

Barry was on his feet, too, now.

"Something in writing," he said.

"Sure! The paper he accused Peggy Rogers of trying to steal."

"Yes," Barry went on, "and get this: somebody did try. Violet Fane, probably. Peggy Rogers says Violet had just left the table when the row started. And that Luis was talking to VI, outside the dressing rooms, just before that."

"—What did he say? He said, 'I'll send this dame to jail, and you to the hot spot.' And you can't send a man to the electric chair for picking pockets."

"No."

"But you might, if you knew of something else he'd done, and had the proof of it. There was a paper, and it had disappeared when the body was found. Who got it? Morano. And not in the Coconut Bar, because it was still in Kelly's pocket at midnight."

Harwood laid down his pipe.

"How do you know that?"

"Somebody told me."

"Jack Rogers?"

"No."

Harwood's eyes narrowed.

"Was it Judge Hamblidge?"

Barry didn't answer.

"If Winslow's shielding anyone it's Judge Hamblidge," Harwood said. "Judge Hamblidge, or someone close to him. I've been thinking that ever since you put the idea in my head. The judge has always been a straight shooter. Why did he write that decision? Was that paper a threat to him, too?"

Barry said, "I don't know."

"I don't either. But I'm going to find out before Saturday."

"Can I help?"

Ernie looked at him.

"No," he replied, curtly. "For the present, I want you to keep out of this."

The Junior League

The Junior League originated among a small group of young women in New York city who in 1900 sent a large number of roses from a party to a hospital. Later they and others banded together for mutual benefit and the good of the community. From giving entertainments for the benefit of a college settlement they extended their activities to many other forms of social aid. Similar organizations of young women were formed in other cities out of which grew a national association of leagues, each interested in its particular ways in the educational, cultural and civic conditions of its community and in volunteer charitable and other service.

Palace Is Tenement

Eastern High School, an Example of Denver's Fine Educational Buildings.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society,
Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

WHEN you enter Denver, Colorado, you come to the urban hub of nearly one-fifth of the United States.

A state capital, a great western city, a gateway to the mountains—all these Denver is and more. Spokes of influence extend from it into the entire Rocky Mountain area, and into large regions of the adjoining plains states as well, making it the financial, commercial, and industrial center of a vast area. No other city in the United States with a quarter-million population is to far removed—500 miles or more—from all other big cities.

Naturally, the people of this great region turn to Denver, whether they are out for business or pleasure, for a commercial fight or a recreational frolic. It's a habit of long standing. The miners started it when they came every so often to the rough little town that was Denver in the sixties to spend some of their gold for supplies and the rest in more or less riotous living.

Later, when great riches were made in gold and silver and cattle, the fortunate ones moved to Denver and built the mansions and hotels and business blocks that started the solid structure of the city. Globe-trotters, adventurers, and capitalists flocked to Denver in the seventies and eighties. Many "younger sons" of the British nobility and several Britons with well-known titles made the city their headquarters for extensive cattle operations, and gave glittering parties at the old Windsor hotel and the American house that have not faded from Denver's memory.

Before its irrigation empire was even dreamed of and while its mineral kingdom was still undeveloped, Denver's location was of little value; but young Denver, despite surveys, clung stubbornly to the belief that in some way the transcontinental railway, when it came, could be pushed through the mountains west of the city. When, instead, the lines of steel were extended through Cheyenne, a hundred miles to the north, Denverites put aside their disappointment and quickly raised the capital to build a connecting line to the new highway.

With this rail contact with the eastern settlements established and with the steady growth of mining in the mountains, Denver drew to herself in a few years direct lines of railroad from the east. Now these highways of steel radiate north and south and east from Denver like the ribs of a fan.

A result of this railway convergence on Denver has been to make the city one of the country's leading livestock markets.

Never Lost Dream

While the transcontinental railways went their busy ways north and south of Denver, the city never lost its dream of a line straight west through the mountains.

Greatest and most tireless of the dreamers was David H. Moffat, who visioned a six-mile tunnel through the Continental Divide under James Peak. He not only dreamed, but worked, and spent his fortune on the project. He did not live to see his plan realized, but on July 7, 1927, the Moffat tunnel was holed through. Now a standard-gauge railway operates double tracks through it into Middle Park, opening up a new mountain realm to Denver.

You sense Denver's most astonishing physical achievement only when you let your imagination wander back seventy years. It is hard to believe that barely three-score and ten years ago this great city, with its hundreds of miles of streets, lined now with fine, towering shade trees, was raw prairie. Not a tree was in sight; only a level plain covered with sparse grass, dry and brown through most of the year.

As the outlander drives about Denver he is struck by the beautiful lawns. There are no exceptions. Whether he views the grass plot of a humble cottage or the park of a near-palace, the lawns are perfect.

The price of the beautiful lawns is much moisture. At certain hours each day in the summer a virtual barrage of water is laid down over the 1,600 acres of lawns in the city's parks. So frequent are these drenchings that in summer the watering hose is not removed night or day from the hydrants. Driving through the parks in late afternoon, you see orderly piles of hose, as regularly spaced as the trees of an orchard, each like a coiled serpent on sentry duty, guarding its allotted plot.

Use Water Lavishly

Knowing that this is a dry country and that water is precious, you ask one of the officials of the water board about the heavy use of water in the city and run into a surprising paradox.

"It is very important that we use water lavishly today," he tells you, "in order that our grandchildren shall have enough for their vital needs. Visiting water-works experts think we are crazy when we make that statement, but it is literally true."

"This is an irrigation country. Municipalities, as well as individuals, must follow the laws worked out under irrigation conditions in getting their water supplies. Once you got hold of a flow of water, if you don't use it you forfeit it to some one who will. We are looking forward to a city of half a million or more by 1950. That's why we want to keep every drop of Denver's annual water supply busy and to increase the supply in all possible ways."

One way in which Denver plans to increase its water supply constitutes an engineering romance. When the Moffat tunnel was dug, an eight-foot-square pilot tunnel was carried through the Continental Divide beside the large railway bore. Denver leased this small tunnel, and plans to bring through the towering mountain range hundreds of millions of gallons of water that now flow into the Pacific ocean.

In education Denver's fame is great. Educators from the two hemispheres have beaten a path to this far-away city at the base of the Rockies to study its scheme of teachers' salaries, its indefatigable efforts to keep the subject-matter which it teaches abreast of all worthwhile developments, and even its school architecture.

The "Denver Plan" for teachers' salaries has been adopted by many municipalities.

A Practical School

Another famous part of the Denver educational system that draws educators from afar is its Opportunity school. From 8.30 o'clock in the morning until 10 at night this practical school is open alike to young people and old. In it elderly men and women, denied the education they wished in youth, receive high school instruction; men displaced in one occupation may learn another; and young men and women may be trained in practical arts, from barbering to bricklaying, and from cooking to etching.

Most of Colorado's institutions of higher education are naturally concentrated in and near Denver. In the city is the University of Denver, founded, when the community was little more than a village, by Colorado's territorial governor, John Evans, the same John Evans who previously had founded Northwestern university, Illinois.

Thirty miles to the northwest, at Boulder, is the University of Colorado. So attractive are the mountains that cast their shadows on the campus and beckon for week-end rambles that the University of Colorado is as busy in summer as in winter.

Fifteen miles west of Denver, at Golden, is the Colorado School of Mines. Growing up in the edge of an important mining region, the institution is one of the outstanding mining schools of the country. In it in 1925 was established the first course in geophysics in American colleges. Graduates of this latest course in mining lore fare forth with dynamite and radio sets, electromagnets, torsion balances, and other devices of modern magic to map rock strata lying hundreds and thousands of feet beneath the surface of the ground.

This Makes Laxative Pleasant to Take

People who know Feen-a-mint don't have to "talk themselves" into taking a laxative when they know they need it. They like Feen-a-mint, the delightful chewing gum laxative. For just as soon as you start chewing Feen-a-mint, its stomach-settling mint brings a clean, fresh taste to the mouth. As you chew out the laxative ingredient which is absolutely tasteless, the flow of digestive juices is increased. The laxative is mixed with them and carried into the system gently. Feen-a-mint doesn't gripe, nauseate or cause upset, and it is non-habit-forming. It passes through the stomach and into the bowels so scientifically that your action is wonderfully easy and thorough. Try the pleasant, refreshing Feen-a-mint way the next time you need a laxative. Doctors prescribe its laxative ingredient for both children and adults. Sold on money-back guarantee. Generous family size package 15c and 25c.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

Then you may suffer nagging back-ache, dizziness, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, puffiness under the eyes, feel nervous, miserable—all upset.

Don't delay! Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are especially for poorly functioning kidneys. They are recommended by grateful users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

SHIPMENTS FROM HONDO.

During the fiscal year for freight shipments at the local shipping point (which includes loadings from Dun-lay also), which closes with July 31st, included the following car lots:

Corn	311
Broomcorn	56
Hegari	46
Maize	36

During the same period only 187 bales of cotton were shipped. This was the lowest shipment since cotton became a regular crop around Hondo, and compares with an even 800 bales shipped the previous year
—a short crop itself.

The month of July just passed showed a rush to move out old corn, as eleven cars of the above went out last month. So also did eight cars of the broomcorn.

July shipments were:

Corn	11 cars
Broomcorn	8 cars
Guanu	1 car
Mutton Sheep	2 cars

The mutton sheep were shipped to Los Angeles, California.

As all these crops have brought reasonably fair prices the financial depression has been materially eased on many of our people and if the new crops now being harvested bring good prices conditions will be greatly relieved.

BRONCHOS WIN HONORS IN SAN ANTONIO TOURNAMENT.

The Hondo Bronchos, piloted by J.
G. Barry, blanked the Luling Red-wings 4 to 0 Sunday night to capture third place honors in the San Antonio Semi-Pro baseball tournament. The Bronchos were awarded $75 for show money. Besides winning third place, the Hondo team, wearing the High School Owls' uniforms, was honored with a silver cup as a trophy for having the best dressed ball club on the field.

Clifford Sadler, Hondo's ace pitcher, won the pitching trophy for having the best earned run average of the tournament. Sadler pitched a five-hit game against the Bell Furniture men on Wednesday night, with no earned runs chalked up against him. After doing relief pitching in Saturday's game with Kelly Field, he returned to the mound Sunday night to blank the strong Luling Redwings.
His average of pitching a little better than 22 innings without allowing an earned run entitled him to the trophy.

The ball club as a whole displayed real rare form during the tournament, having won three out of four games played against some of the strongest clubs of Southwest Texas.

The hostess served delicious refreshments of cake and ice cream.

AGED MAN DEAD.

Mr. Samuel B. Morelock, aged 79 years, died at 7 P. M. Wednesday, August 5, 1936, at the home of Mrs.
O. Haralson. The aged man had been in failing health for several months and on Monday of this week he was brought from his home in D'Hanis to Hondo for medical attention. The deceased was a native of Tennessee and prior to moving to Medina County he resided in Brown County, Texas. For the past eight-teen years he has made his home in D'Hanis, residing with his son, Mr.
F. A. Morelock. Survivors are four sons and two daughters. Mrs. More-lock preceded her husband in death a little more than a year ago.

The body will be taken overland today by Mr. John A. Jorger, local mortician, to Alice, Texas, where funeral services will be held this afternoon.

The bereaved family has the sympaty of their Medina County friends.

NEW CROP GRAIN SHIPMENTS BEGIN.

Shipment of new crop grain sorghum began yesterday, August 6, when Messrs. Grube and Chapman, wholesale and retail grain and feed dealers of Hondo, shipped the first car of threshed hegari. The shipment consisted of 60,000 pounds and was loaded in bulk without sacking in a freight car. Its ultimate destination is Kansas City. While the price paid the farmers is private, it is understood that they realized a good price. While the acreage of this grain this year was not as large as last year the yield is unusually fine and if present prices hold up for the entire crop it should bring considerable cash to the producers.

Lots of plain and medium grass steers cashed at $4.50 to $5.00, with plainer kinds down to $4.00. Mostly early sales of fat calves, light weight yearlings bulked at $6.25 to $6.50 with odd lots to $6.25. A few lots of good grade of calves at $5.25. Medium grade of calves mostly down to $3.50, with "rannies" down to $3.00. In comparatively light sale with most sales of good fat calves selling at around $4.00 to $4.50. A few cows turned at $3.50 to $4.00. The market continued active and about steady with week's close. An early top of $10.25 to $10.50. Best 140 to 175 lb. butchers, $8.50 to $10.00. The 350 pounds, $9.25 to $10.20. A few cows sold about steady at $3.50 to $4.00.

THINGS ONE REMEMBERS.
By R. M. Hofer.

The Associated Press dispatch from reports that an editor of a German newspaper has been sentenced to life imprisonment for high treason.

The dispatch added that no official statement was given as to just what he had done to merit such a punishment, but that members of the foreign press corps remembered a few months before he had urged to them some of the orders of the German press by the "ministry of propaganda"—and had been immediately arrested.

There is a fine fruit of dictatorship. Certainly it seems incredible that any government should tell its subjects precisely what it may or may not say, and advocate, or that an editor who disobeys such dictation should be sentenced to a life behind bars.

Such things can only happen in a country where freedom of press, freedom of speech and constitutional rights have been abrogated by iron-fisted dictators more powerful than ancient Zars.

Here in our country, freedom of speech and action exists by the laws of the United States Constitution.—Industrial News Review.

WHAT TO DO FOR POISON IVY.
Contrary to popular belief, a person cannot be poisoned by merely touching the plant, but it is entirely possible to get the poison from dropping the oil on the coats of animals or in smoke coming from burning underbrush where the ivy is growing.

If the droplets of oil have not been rubbed by the skin, an alcoholic solution, or even better, washing exposures with a rich lather of ordinary laundry soap will remove the poison.

If the skin has absorbed the oil, a 5 per cent solution of ferric chloride dissolved in equal parts of alcohol and water or a 4 per cent solution of potassium permanganate, the old snake-bite remedy, is recommended as calamine lotion, or similar preparations of zinc oxide, lime-water, and a dash of carbolic acid.—Prof. G. Albert Hill in the Progressive Farmer.

GOVERNMENT BENEFIT PAYMENTS.
Medina County has received $45,009.45 in rental and benefit payments in the three years since the creation of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, it has been announced by H. P. Drought, state director of the National Emergency Council.

Rental and benefit payments in Medina county for the cotton program totaled $60,757.16; corn-hog $181,133; peanuts $3,469.16.

Rental and benefit payments in this amounted to $139,412,186.46 in the three-year period, Drought said.

Cotton rental and benefit payments made for the entire state aggregated $114,070,836.72; wheat, $1,531,129.10; corn-hog, $6,403,344; sugar, $706.98; rice, $1,975,103; peanuts, $381,111.19.

LAST CALL FOR FEED.
Dr. Tait Butler has often declared that "the livestock problem in the South is a feed problem." The late John Field, one-time farm paper editor and banker, put it this way: "A state's livestock industry is based on its minimum feed production in its worst year."

June brings the last call for ample feed production. In making plans to produce, not just what they will need to live on, and then add 25 per cent to the acreage usually required to produce the quantity of feed thought to be best. A surplus of home-grown feed never yet broke a farmer.—The Progressive Farmer.

Unless a college graduate learns the value of continued study, he has missed the true conception of education.—Gloria Young.

GIVE CHILD CHANCE TO ENJOY SUMMER.

Schools are closed for the summer all over the State, and citizens interested in the welfare of the future generation are confronted with the fact that a vast amount of energy and ability may go to waste if skill and patience are not employed in directing growing children in this play time season, according to John W. Brown, State Health Officer.

"The civic, moral, and educational value of developing the natural talents of each child," Dr. Brown said, "has a far-reaching influence on the health, knowledge, and character of the future men and women of this State. The child need not be directed in each little act that he performs. Let the summer vacation season be the time when the child has a chance to develop his own individuality. Many an artist, statesman, or competent executive has come from humble surroundings. But looking back of this, we probably will find that this outstanding individual had a chance to develop his natural talent."

"It has been observed that children grow faster during the summer months than at any other time. This is explainable, perhaps, because it is then that they are out in the sunshine and fresh air. Good health is essential to physical and mental growth. The prime factors of good health are care of the body, nourishing food of the right kind, regular habits, sufficient sleep, rest and play, and a happy state of mind."

"Of course, where the child lives and under what conditions, means a great deal as to the type of recreation he will find during the summer. The city child will look forward to trips to the country or hours spent in the play grounds and swimming pools. The child living in the country will have many things to do that will keep him in the sunshine most of the time."

"Let us all work toward the end that each child may feel at the end of summer that he has worked out some of his own ideas and dreams, and still developed his physical and mental capacities during these few months of play."

THIS WORLD IS OURS.
A poor, blind beggar's pleading cup
Catching some crumbs on which to sup,
A cane to guide the faltering tread
Of hungered soul in search of bread,
With ever deepening loneliness
That calls a bygone happiness;
Cold ashes where once passion burned
To object of man's pity turned;
Fair castles hurricaned away,
Dashed, splintered like a potter's clay...

Such kind of world is mostly ours,
Wan stalks of one time flaming flowers,
A garden of Gethsemane
Where agony is waiting me.

And yet, and yet, say what you please,
There still is left the fanning breeze
That wings its way from out the sea
And cools the brow of you and me;
The unspoiled beauty of the trees;
And such things as are like to these,
The ripples on a smiling face,
An ocean spray's exquisite lace,
The song of frogs within the pool,
When day is done, and night turned cool,
The fondling hope close to your heart
That you would hate to have depart...

All these are mine, are thine, are left
To heal a heart that's scarred and cleft.

Dozens of celebrities whose names are household words throughout the United States have been heard over the Gulf Centennial Network. This network includes a system of miniature radio stations called "singing towers", which cover the Exposition Grounds, and an intricate system of remote "pick up points" centered in and controlled from the Gulf Radio Studios.

The list of celebrities who have appeared in the studios and over the network reads like a "who's who" of the radio and entertainment world. Included among those who have appeared are Ted Husing, famous Columbia Broadcasting System announcer and sports analyst; Robert Ringley, creator of "Believe It or Not"; Robert Taylor; Lupe Velez; June Knight; Allan Jones, and other famous movie stars; Rudy Vallee and his Orchestra; Jose Manzanera and his Orchestra; Jan Garber and his Orchestra; Buddy Rogers and his Orchestra; Ted Lewis and his Orchestra; Ace Brigade and his Orchestra; Art Kassel and his Orchestra; Duke Ellington and Cab Calloway.

Heading the list of famous personalities from the political arena are President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who spoke over the system June 12; and Secretary of Commerce, Daniel C. Roper, who represented the President on opening day. Included in the list are Governor James V. Alfred and the Governors of a half dozen other states.

Such interesting personalities as Barney Oldfield; David Wark Griffith; Amelia Earhart; Clyde Pangborn; Colleen Moore; Elizabeth Arden; and Moran and Van of the Two Black Crows fame, have been interviewed.

Among those who are scheduled to appear within the next few days are Bob Burns, the Arkansas Philosopher and Comedian; Ginger Rogers, Texas born movie star and dancer; Harry Richman, and Max Baer.

Tommy Dorsey and his Orchestra are scheduled to begin a national broadcast from the studios early in August, and many other famous orchestra leaders, musicians and entertainers have been definitely scheduled for appearances later in the year.

OVERHEATED HORSES AND MULES: WHAT TO DO.

There are usually ample danger signs of approaching heat stroke in the horse or mule, but these are frequently overlooked and sometimes ignored, with serious consequences. If the driver does not note sluggishness, undue panting, or other symptoms of more or less distress, he should at least realize danger ahead if a hard working animal on a hot day fails to sweat normally or if he stops sweating. If a horse or mule after sweating in the usual way, stops sweating while still working in hot weather serious danger already exists. But if this danger signal is promptly recognized there may still be a good chance of avoiding serious or permanent injury to the animal.

The method of procedure when early symptoms of heat stroke are recognized is simple. Stop the work, if practicable get the animal in the shade promptly, apply cold water to the head, and smart friction to the body by rubbing with rough cloths. And while these simple common sense things are being done a veterinarian should be called if there is one available. But NEVER APPLY WATER AS A FIRST AID TREATMENT TO THE BODY OF ANY ANIMAL THAT IS OVERHEATED. The careful hogman begins applying water to the nose and face, gradually working up to the top of the head of his hot hog, and the same practice is imperative for the horse or mule.—Dr. Tait Butler in The Progressive Farmer.

When political parties are not throwing hats in the ring, they're passing them around.—Jacksonville (Fla.) Journal.

Why Gulf is the Gas for August

"'COMON IN, FELLAS, and cool off!' Most days are hot in August. Gasoline must be refined specially for this weather. If it isn't, part of the fuel goes out the exhaust unburned, wasted ; ; ; and you don't get the mileage you should. Use That Good Gulf Gasoline in August. It's refinery-adjusted for summer weather—'Kept in Step with the Calendar'—all of it goes to work, none of it goes to waste."

THE NEW IDEA OF CANCER. MANY CASES CAN BE CURED IF REPORTED PROMPTLY.

Bulletin No. 11

American Society for the Control of Cancer, 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

CANCER CLINICS.

When a person suspects that he or she has cancer the thing to do is to apply immediately to a competent physician or to a clinic for diagnosis and advice. If he has a good family physician, that is the person to go to.
If he wants to find a good physician he should select one who stands well among his fellows, one who occupies a responsible position in a hospital, or one who is recommended by some other good doctor.

Clinics are of two kinds: Temporary clinics, which are established for a few days for the purpose of afforded free examination at times when cancer weeks, health days or other brief periods of intensive educational activities are being conducted, and permanent clinics, which are usually connected with general hospitals.

In a well conducted clinic, either temporarily or permanently established, the patient is given the best of scientific attention. In such places facilities exist for diagnosis that are far beyond the usual resource of private physicians. Furthermore, in clinics there is generally a group of physicians who are specialists in treating the various parts of the body where cancer occurs. Thus, cancer of the tongue is attended to by a man who possesses knowledge and skill in oral surgery. And so with cancer of the breast and cancer in other locations. It is to be noted that the skillful surgeon who treats the cancer is one who is especially familiar with the part of the body in which the cancer occurs.

Cancer specialists, that is, persons who treat cancer no matter in what location it occurs, are not at all common among persons of high standing in the medical profession. A person who advertises himself as a cancer specialist is often a charlatan and without any standing among reputable physicians.

The Time To Cure a Cancer Is When It Is Beginning.

If you think you have any of the symptoms described in these articles you should be examined by your doctor or at a hospital at once.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The SAN ANTONIO BUSINESS COLLEGE announces the following substantial additions to the faculty and personnel:

Dr. E. H. Smith, A. B., M. Accts., Phd., who will teach Higher Accounting and Business Administration, comes to us from Strayer's College, Philadelphia, one of the largest and most successful commercial schools in the United States. President Strayer, who expressed a great desire to retain Dr. Smith permanently, recommends him without reserve.

Dr. Smith has had many years of successful experience as teacher and executive, and his professional and business experience includes the practice of law and accountancy throughout this country, and the instructing and coaching of many successful applicants for C. P. A. certificates. He is a member of several accountancy and law organizations including the Bar of several States and the United States Supreme Court Bar.

Dr. Smith has decided that he prefers San Antonio to any other city for his permanent residence, and his acquaintance of over 20 years with the San Antonio Business College and its president, Ramon T. Flores, were important factors in making this decision.

Mrs. W. K. Smith, B. S. C., A. B.,
head of the Secretarial Department, also comes from Strayer's Business College with the highest possible recommendation as to her character, personality and teaching ability. Mrs.
Smith's experience includes about ten years teaching secretarial subjects in city high schools and commercial colleges; also as secretary of bank officials and other persons prominently connected with leading professional and industrial concerns.
Her value as secretary, and teacher of secretarial subjects has been evidenced by several special awards and complimentary expressions from the various Gregg organizations and their leaders.

Other members of the faculty remain as heretofore.

QUIHI NOTES.

And Abraham said My son, God will provide himself a lamb for a burnt offering: so they went both of them together. Gen. 22:8.

A walk, a speedy run and rush to the operating room is always a distressing and grievous matter; the more so when the case is critical and prospects for recovery rather dim and dreary, and death, like a ghastly spectre, seems to be speeding along with every turn of the wheels. What thoughts are coursing through the mind, what words are flowing from the lips, what meagre, often intentionally false hopes are offered the trembling patient in the dreadful hour? Is it right and proper to muffle the seriousness of the situation, cooking up a soothing lullaby, dishing out fictions and falsehoods, so-called emergency lies, in order to screen the danger, to avoid the shock, and let the patient perhaps pass out unwarned, unprepared, unready?

And should the preacher, in the apparent hour of death, join the din of deceitful voices or adopt the role of a dumb dog, where he is called to offer the comfort and light through the valley of the shadows of death?

Abraham goes through it all. The son is fully aware of the impending sacrifice. By and by, he notices the insufficiency in the preparation. "My father," he calls out, surprised but not suspecting, and the very words must have felt like a dagger in the father's heart, "behold the fire and wood; but where is the lamb for the burnt offering?" Does the father blubber, blurt and blare with stentorian voice and gloomy mien: "You are it?" No. Does he evade, quibble, glossing over the issue, and telling the boy everything but the truth?

Not at all. He maintains, God will provide, and with this key-note, this running theme, the father launches out and explains his prospects and his bains, his faith and hope, the outlook and outcome for lamb and lad, for life and death. Such assurance must suffice for father and son, for you and for me.

Some sixty members and friends of the Luther League took in the ice cream social and other features that were arranged for a joyous evening.
Prizes were awarded to Miss Lucille Boehle, Mrs. Clarence Saathoff and Mrs. Alb. Mumme; on the men's side, to Mr. Walter Grell, Mr. Marvin Grell and Mr. Emil Mumme. The others made up their loss with a rich serving of cream and cake. Thanks to the committee of arrangements there was not a flaw in the evening's program.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Balzen, accompanied by Misses Florence and Aleen Grell and Mr. Marvin Grell, had a very pleasant trip to Alpine and vicinity, and though the farming prospects around there are almost nil, due to a long rainless period, they enjoyed fine hospitality with kinfolks and friends.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

The Fair Sex
BOHEMIAN GROVE, CALIF.—Up here in the Bohemian club's grove where, during the summer encampment, no women are allowed either at large or on the leash, I've been thinking about their little peculiarities.

If two women were cast away on a desert island with just each other for company, and after, let's say, ten or fifteen years, the rescue steamer arrived, they'd both be half way up the gangplank before either remembered the really important things she'd been intending all along to say to her companion; and no matter if the tide were falling and the wind rising, they'd stop right there in their tracks and thresh it all out.

If you doubt this, see what happens when a pair of them are swapping good-bys, after an all-day conversation, on finishing a long chatty motor trip together. If they can find a narrow doorway where they'll block traffic, that's where they'll halt, always.

It's a curious sex, any way you take it. But we men keep on taking it and liking it. I don't know whether we're dumb—or numb. Must be one or the other.

CELEBRATING his fifth birthday the other day, my small grandson and namesake met another gentleman of like age who bragged that his nurse brought him to the party in a car.

"Can your mama drive a car?" inquired the guest.
"No," answered my descendant, "but I'm going to teach her. All you do is start off and keep going till you have to stop, and then you say, 'Damn those red lights.'"

It would appear that Cobb has been listening to his grandfather.

Praising King Edward.
IF HE was a Communist, of a breed who are usually half-baked mentalities, it was only to be expected that his effort to murder King Edward should be—thank heavens—a fizzle.

If he was a lunatic, then he's the kind of lunatic who should spend the rest of his days behind high walls. If he was a deliberate assassin—well, at least he gave a gallant monarch a chance to show how gallantly monarchs can behave in the face of danger.

Any man, given the royal background and an open path to the throne, can be a king, but not every king is a man. This king is—he proved it and this part of the world rejoices at the outcome.

The Troubles of Europe.
WE MAY have our own troubles, including so many mounting taxes over the land and so much mountain music over the radio, but what with Spain rent by internal war, and France having strikes which almost approximate war, and Poland threatening revolt against Nazi control of what, laughably, is called the "Free" City of Danzig, and the rest of them pretty generally stewing in their respective political casseroles, we're lucky.

In fact I can think of but one thing the European nations have which we could use, but, alas, will never get, needless to say. I refer to the money they owe us.

How the League Performs.
UNDER the rattle of the machine guns and the shrieks of the victims as civil war flames across Spain, that faint creeping sound which you hear, sounding something like a mouse in the wainscoting, is the League of Nations taking its customary prompt steps to enforce peace upon this and all other distracted countries whatsoever.

By the way, does anyone remember when, once upon a bygone time, there was a war to end the persistent disease called war, a final war which forevermore would restore true democratic principles and motherly love to rival nations and embittered peoples? To date the result makes one almost despair of ever finding a cure for my dandruff.

Pandas Live in Trees
The panda, not to be confused with the giant panda, is a scientific puzzle. In some ways he looks and acts as if he might be a relative of the raccoon. In other ways he seems to be kinfolk to bears. Scientists never have been able to decide this question, so they gave him a family name of his own, Ailuropus fulgens. In their native Nepal, pandas live in holes in trees and sometimes hide among the rocks. They are nocturnal creatures, and it is customary for them to have twins. Their cry is a sudden squawl.

MATCHMAKER

By MEREDITH SCHOLL

© Associated Newspapers, WNU Service.

"I DON'T like to be catty," Lillie Newhall said, "but you're wasting your time with Glen Fales." Lillie surveyed her perfectly proportioned features in the dressing table mirror, and deftly tucked an unruly strand of hair back into place.

"Glen," she went on, "was the most popular man at Ryson Beach last summer. Even gorgeous Shirley Leighton made a play for him."

Naomi, standing in the doorway of the room which she shared with Lillie Newhall during the Thornton's week-end party, turned and went out without waiting to hear what else the girl might have to say.

Walking down the deep-cushioned stairs, she sighed heavily. She understood what Lillie had meant.

Lillie was warning her, ordering her to keep out of the way, because she didn't stand a chance with Glen anyhow.

Which was right.

She wasn't fool enough to let herself think she stood a chance with him—not with such a beautiful creature as Lillie to compete with.

Naomi knew she was ordinary in looks and ordinary in her ways with men.

And because of this she wondered why Grace Thornton had invited her down for the week-end.

Suddenly she remembered that it hadn't been Grace, but Lillie who had engineered the invitation.

Lillie? Why should Lillie—?

Naomi stopped in her descent of the stairs.

It came to her in a rushing flood of horror.

Lillie had wanted her there for the sake of comparison!

She knew that her own attractiveness would be far more pronounced if someone like Naomi were on hand.

The realization was sickening.

Even that warning had been part of Lillie's scheme.

For Lillie knew that if she warned Naomi to keep off, the latter would instinctively resent her attitude and attempt to win Glen Fales' interest, which was exactly what Lillie wanted.

Out on the terrace, Grace Thornton rushed up to her with extended hands.

"Darling! So glad you could come."

"Hello, Grace. I'm glad to be here."

A man and a woman were standing near, and Grace led Naomi up to them.

"Glen, this is Naomi Peterson. You remember her? She was at Ryson last summer."

"Of course," Glen Fales, tall, handsome, tanned, smiled down at Naomi and took her hand. "Of course I remember. Let me see, there were two of you, I mean—you had a friend—"

"Yes, Lillie Newhall. She'll be down in a moment."

Naomi tried hard to keep the bitterness out of her voice.

She wanted to add: "You'll always find me where Lillie happens to be. She drags me around so that men will notice how beautiful she is."

Grace Thornton fluttered away to greet other guests, and Naomi found herself alone with Glen Fales.

"It's good seeing you again," he was saying, but his eyes were looking over her head.

"She'll be here presently," Naomi said briefly.

Glen regarded her in surprise.

"Who?" he asked.

"Lillie. She was about ready when I left."

"Oh, I see."

He seemed on the point of saying more, but at the moment Lillie appeared, and Grace brought her across the terrace.

In the excitement of the reunion that followed, Naomi moved away.

She felt a little sick; not equal to the task of watching Lillie employing her man-catching artifice.

An hour later, sitting near the fish pond, she saw Glen Fales coming across the lawn.

She thought: "Lillie has escaped him. That's part of her game—never appear too eager . . . He wants to talk to me about her. Men are funny that way."

Glen Fales sat down beside her, uninvited.

"Been looking for you everywhere," he smiled.

"You know, I remember last summer—"

"Lillie said you would," Naomi interrupted.

"I mean she remembered, too, and was looking forward to this week-end."

"Was she?" Glen arched his brows in that curious way he had.

"Because it's what you wanted to know."

She set off along the path that led back to the house.

"I don't blame you for your interest, Lillie's beautiful, and—and I'm sure you'll have no regrets."

He caught up with her before she'd taken ten steps.

"Listen, why the intense interest in me and your friend. I mean are you a matchmaker or something?"

She turned on him, eyes alight.

"Matchmaker! Isn't that the role I'm supposed to play?"

She laughed.

"Lillie depends on me. I can't fail her in her hour of need."

Throughout the evening Naomi succeeded in avoiding Glen Fales.

She saw him watching her, felt his eyes following her about the dance floor.

And suddenly she hated him.

Hated him because he was making her unhappy and miserable, because she knew he wanted to talk to her about Lillie.

That would be torture.

It wasn't as it should be, not when the feeling in her heart was of its present nature.

She saw him dancing with Lillie, saw them stroll on to the terrace together, and, at length, unable to stand it longer, she left the ballroom and headed for the stairs.

At the foot of the stairs she paused.

Glen Fales had appeared from nowhere and had called to her.

There was a curious expression in his eyes.

"Aren't you being just a little ridiculous?"

"Whatever do you mean?"

"I mean all this talk about your friend Lillie—and me."

Naomi laughed.

The laugh bordered on hysteria.

"Mr. Fales, I don't know what you're talking about. I—I've done what was expected of me—as best I could—and now—I'm through. I can't go on."

She turned, but he seized her wrist.

"Wait a minute."

He drew her close to him.

"You're a fool! A little fool!"

Tears were in her eyes.

"Yes—I am! I know I am! Let me go!"

"No. I've been trying to talk to you all evening. The best I could do was talk to your friend Lillie—about you. She is vastly annoyed and disgusted. She finally went off with Ray Philbrick and left me alone."

Naomi swayed a little, and he caught her in his arms.

"You're lying. It isn't the truth. You're trying to make it easy. You know I love you—and you're trying not to hurt me. It's Lillie you want. She's beautiful and—"

He crushed out her words with his lips.

He held her close for long minutes . . . released her at last . . . looked into her eyes.

"Now do you believe it's you I love? And no one else?"

Naomi closed her eyes.

After a moment she opened them.

He was still there, still with the same intent, honest look in his eyes.

For answer she pulled his face down to her lips once more. . . .

"I Spy" Mirrors Survive
in North French Homes

Although northern France is one of the most up-to-date and prosperous regions in the nation, one picturesque aspect of the Middle Ages still persists—the "I Spy" mirrors which permit the householders to spy upon persons passing in the street, observes a (Lille) France United Press correspondent.

In French these mirrors are called espionnos which, translated literally, means "spies" and the dictionary gives this definition: "A looking glass so placed near a window to show persons coming or going outside." In principle, this mirror is the same as the one placed before a chauffeur in an automobile so that he can see what is behind him.

Such mirrors have existed in French Flanders for centuries, but they are to be found nowhere else in France.

Almost every house is equipped with one or two of these mirrors right next to the principal window of the ground floor. Those on the inside thereby are permitted to see everything that goes on outside, without being seen by those whom they are inspecting.

These mirrors also are used in keeping out undesirable persons. When the bell rings, the maid looks into the mirror and reports to her mistress.

If the visitor is persona non grata, the mistress remarks: "Let her ring, don't open the door, I don't want to see her today."

Even the more recently built dwelling houses are equipped with these mirrors.

Valuable Fishing Rights
In 1924 in Peiping, China, a man bought the "fishing rights" in the pond of the old Winter Palace for three years for $450,000—and made a fortune without selling a fish. All he did was to dredge for the countless gold identification tags that had been attached to the numerous fish given daily as gifts to the emperors for more than 300 years.—Eliot White, Roselle, N. J., in Collier's Weekly.

"Love Alliances"
During the Age of Chivalry in Europe, when husbands and wives were not supposed to be in love with each other, many knights and ladies who were married to others entered into platonic partnerships called "love alliances." Strangely enough, says Collier's Weekly, these alliances were frequently solemnized by a religious ceremony and were harder to dissolve than regular marriages.

"The Man Who . . ."

Tales and Traditions from American Political History
BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A SPEECH OF NOMINATION

MOST of the reason for the title of these little stories—The Man Who—is supplied by the orators at political conventions who place the name of candidates in nomination.

Today from the loudspeakers come to most of us convincing talks, startlingly free of modesty, which extol the virtues of this favorite son or that one as his name is placed before convention delegates.

But the most successful of these nominating speeches occurred long before static was a household word. It was made in Chicago at the Republican convention of 1896 by James A. Garfield, and made honestly, in behalf of the nomination of John Sherman.

Its net result was that Sherman failed to win the nomination but Garfield succeeded. So that Garfield, later a martyred President, actually is the man who nominated himself.

Here is how it happened. President Hayes had pledged himself not to be a candidate. When the convention opened it was plain that great efforts would be made to nominate General Grant for a third term. James G. Blaine was a formidable candidate but Grant had been presented in a glowing burst of oratory from Roscoe Conkling, a bitter enemy of Blaine.

Garfield's speech in behalf of Sherman followed Conkling's effort. Instead of qualifying merely as an anti-climax it is described by those who were there as an outstanding oratorical triumph.

Grant, Blaine, Sherman, George F. Edmunds, Elihu B. Washburne and William Windom divided the votes until the thirty-fourth ballot. Then Garfield, whose speech still resounded in the minds of the delegates, received 17 votes.

He immediately took the floor and protested that he was there only in the interests of Sherman, whose candidacy he managed. He was ruled out of order. On the next ballot his strength had increased to 50 votes. On the thirty-sixth ballot, with 399 votes, he received the nomination which his epochal speech had asked for another man.

ORIGINAL STEAM-ROLLER

THE steam-roller may not cover ground with the speed of an antelope, but it gets there just the same.

First of the steam-roller tacticians to appear on the American political scene was the illustrious Marcus A. Hanna of Ohio, whose effective maneuverings behind the scenes still serve as an outstanding lesson in the political primer.

Steam-roller methods of attaining the objective, which in this case was the nomination of William McKinley for President, were first utilized by Mark Hanna in the Republican convention of 1896. And they succeeded.

Hanna had observed the amazing switch of delegates to James A. Garfield in 1880 when the latter was earnestly and honestly pleading the cause of John Sherman of Ohio. Sherman tried again in 1888, this time employing McKinley as his convention manager.

At one stage of the proceedings, the report spread that if McKinley would say the word the strength of the delegates would be thrown to him. He promptly put an end to the movement, his vigorous interruption of the roll-call, for he already had received a vote, ending with a demand that: "No delegate who would not cast reflection upon me shall cast a ballot for me."

Hanna was impressed, as were many others. From that day he moved his support from Sherman, who had been defeated three times, and began to groom McKinley for the presidency.

The opportunity came in 1896. When the convention met, only "regular" delegates were seated. The national committee o.k.'d them, one by one, by the vote of 35 to 15. And it just happened they all were McKinley men.

Newspaper reports of the times describe the proceedings as a farce. But at any rate they were successful for McKinley's principal opponent was courting the southern vote, many of whom could not prove an unbroken chain of party fealty, and therefore were not seated.

The result was an outstanding majority for McKinley on the first ballot, Thomas B. Reed of Maine running a tired second, flattened under the weight of the original steam-roller, today an accepted part of our national politics.

OFFHAND OBSERVATIONS.

By R. R. Claridge.

Some time readers of FARMING may remember that ever since we began to hear nothing about a home market, and everything about exports and imports, I have been trying to get our people, town or country, to see that the more we can sell at home, and the less we buy abroad, the better for us, for several reasons: (1) that we save the freight, comin' and goin'; and (2) that, in converting into the finished product at home, we employ home labor, and pay home taxes.

When a Liverpool cotton spinner buys our cotton and exports it to his foreign factory, in estimating the cost to convert it into cloth as an item of such cost, he most certainly does not overlook the freight; and the farmer who thinks that ultimately, it doesn't come out of what he gets for his cotton, ought to take something for his ignorance. And that is not all, or the worst. When the foreign spinner ships his cotton goods back to us; or, to be plainer, when we "import" it, the duty (tariff) on it has to come out of somebody, and in some way, it sooner or later reaches the price of the raw product of the farmer.

As to the tariff on imports, and as to who it comes out of, the farmer certainly pays his part of it, when he buys the "imports". Meantime, the ultra protectionist is strong for a tariff on the finished product, being as a rule, a home factor or wholesaler; in other words, he wants "protection from foreign competition". But he is by no means so strong for even a little protection for the raw product of the farmer. I may as well add that he is most always a Republican. The rank free trader, most always a Democrat, is for free trade as to everything regardless; and if he can't get the foreign factory stuff in free, seems well satisfied to compete with slave-made foreign raw production, on a free trade basis. Reminds me again of the old saying that: "The Republican party is a blank rascal, and the Democratic party is a blank fool", or words to that effect. And they both seem to be running true to form. The party of the first part has had but one honest interval, of very short duration; while the last named aggregation has had two or three sane spells when out of power, but went "bug" as soon as they got in.

After all, the Neck-and-Belly Trust, not confined to either party, seems to have lost sight of the fact that it takes money of some sort or credit, to run a nation as big as ours, and lack the sense to see that it simply can't be done with both cash and credit tied up; how tight? I leave it to you all as to how much cash has been loose, save and except the tax-money dole to needy people unable otherwise to get their hand on a dollar for their labor. And credit, the last few years? I leave that to our readers how hard it has been to get a little credit out of the banks or stores. One of the worst phases of the N. R. A. dole hand-out is lately having the light turned on it. For instance, it has come to light that, while small fry plow-up and hold-out victims have been getting barely enough to keep their souls inside their bodies, the big syndicate slave farmers have wasted on them, by the alphabetical bureaucrats, politically delegated for the purpose, literally millions of dollars; to two big Florida concerns, one a sugar-planting concern, over a million dollars each. Fifty thousand, to $100,000 hand-outs appear to have been quite common.

In defense of a home market, it is well to add that American industrial production is as soulless a robber of the farmer as the foreign freebooter, if not worse; meaning that any change for the betterment of the farmer seems hopeless under the economic system which has gradually become more predatory from way back, till the limit has been, I should say, about reached. But there are some indications of a better day for the farmers. For one thing, the independent business men, in fair way to be put out of business by the branch stores, package houses and other auxiliaries of the utility swindle, are coming at last to realize that the influences detrimental to them, politically and every other way, are in the main the same that are making slaves of the farmers; and moreover are showing tendency to "take it up" for him. And, fellow citizens, when the merchants, not in cahoots with the octopus, along with organized labor and the farmers, get in together, they can do anything they please with our great big country. And being an old line Democrat a la Thomas Jefferson, I do hope the combination aforementioned won't wait for a cooperative line-up for a return to Democratic government in a broad, fundamental sense, till big business backed by the Neck-and-Belly Trust, brings the land we love into bolshevism or worse, if there is anything worse.

will be saved, but in psychological result. There is no question but what the specter of still higher taxes frightens thousands of investors and shoves money into safe-deposit vaults and tea pots; that it prevents business from going ahead and expanding; that it discourages home building and savings; that, in this time of unemployment, it creates more unemployment, more hardship, more distress.

Every citizen should demand a sound program to lower taxes. We can do this by not asking for expenditures that touch only a small part of the country at the expense of the whole; by taking the broad, rather than the local, view. We can follow up federal reductions by forcing state, county and municipal governments—which are the most expensive of all—and public officials, to observe the example. In short, the time and the opportunity for tax reduction are here—and it must be had.—Editorial fall 1932.

MIDNIGHT ON BOOT HILL.

Last night I went down in the graveyard to the part that's called boot hill.

Where sleep the spurred and looted outlaws that were killed in Coffeyville;

I thought I'd like to visit such a place at midnight when it's dim And hear the night wind strum the cedar trees and sing its lonesome hymn.

I hadn't been there very long before I heard the tread of feet, And soon I saw the boot hill gang pass by on horses lean and fleet; Then through the tombstones fled these phantom riders shouting out in glee.

And then they stopped and wheeled about and started riding down on me.

They all wore boots and spurs and six-guns, and their hats were broad and high. And then they reined their mounts and looked at me and heaved a thirsty sigh.

The one who seemed to be the leader asked me for a big stiff drink; I drink alone, said I, and then they dashed away to Hell, I think.
